A dense block of handwritten Japanese text in kuzushiji style surrounds the illustration. The text is organized into several vertical columns. Some characters are written in larger, bold strokes, while others are smaller and more closely packed. The text appears to be a dialogue or a narrative description related to the scene shown in the illustration.

Handwritten Japanese text is interspersed around the illustration. At the top, there are several columns of text. Other columns of text are placed around the central figure and the background figure. The text is written in a cursive, kuzushiji style, typical of Edo-period woodblock prints.
