

蓋印
147

Handwritten Japanese calligraphy in cursive style (sōsho). The text is dense and flows across the page. The characters are highly stylized and interconnected. The main body of text is written in a continuous, fluid motion, typical of cursive calligraphy. The characters are dark and stand out against the light background of the paper.

Handwritten Japanese calligraphy, likely a signature or a short inscription, located on the right side of the page. It consists of several large, bold characters written in a cursive style.

